Is Meth being used at your property??

There can be serious health, financial and legal consequences to meth residue within homes. Our easy onsite assessment can put your mind at ease with immediate results. Meth contamination is invisible, has no smell, and with increasing numbers of users within Australia is becoming a potentially major health threat.

Rapid Initial Meth Assessment

On the spot testing of individual rooms within your property with immediate results. Our qualified technicians will perform this assessment which is aimed at discovering if any meth contamination is present within your premises. If a negative result is achieved, no further testing is required at this time, however we recommend performing assessments at regular intervals such as the change of tenancy or every 12 months. If any room returns a positive swap for methamphetamine then a further, more detailed assessment will be conducted of each contaminated room.

Checkmate Safety will perform spot testing of high use areas in individual properties (dependent upon size of properties and accessibility) during their Rapid Initial Meth Assessment. Some locations may include:

- Bedroom Walls
- Air conditioners or Fans
- Kitchen Extractor Fan
- Garage Walls
- Living Areas

Forensic Lab Test

If a positive reading is found technicians will conduct a detailed forensic assessment of the affected room(s). This involves taking a swab from the contaminated room(s) and sending it to a forensic lab to determine the severity of the contamination. There are significant health risk associated with meth contamination and if results are found to be over the safe levels a remediation action plan will need to be executed. Before the residence can be deemed safe for tenants it will need to return a negative result on a Forensic Lab test conducted on the previously contaminated rooms.
